Who is going to be the first journalist to write:

Death Roe Mom

Shockingly, this could happen to you, too, soon!

These crimes occurred over the course of a few fraught and frantic weeks.

Those culpable had ample time to consider their actions or lack thereof. The delay or failure to act has legal consequences. Malice aforethought worsens the nature of the crimes committed by dozens.

Not only did they fail to act, contrary to what is stipulated by the written law, officials are said to be investigating individuals with whom each may have further shared this information!

...and with whom those individuals may have told.

In the early 1970's Heather Locklear inadvertently demonstrated virality and virility to America in a TV commercial for Faberge Organics Shampoo where "they told two friends... about the shampoo.

Forty years after the shampoo and Ms. Locklear have faded from commercial memory, but after more than two years of Covid, everyone absolutely understands the significance of virality, if not virility.

Today's local crack investigators are discovering the consequences of virality on the beat.

Reported

Upon further questioning of one confidential source, at least one individual did in fact make out a written report to local law enforcement.

However, it is believed that the law enforcement representative failed to act in a timely manner, regarding the statement of intent to commit a felony.

Reason for the failure is not known

But it is a very small town, and the town's newly-minted convict is notoriously well known.

The true start to this very tragic story is itself a case study in disadvantaged youth in poor rural southern States, not only AL, in MO, KY, FL, IN, MS, LA, TN... too!

The true tragedy is not only the current conviction but the circumstances of the convict's upbringing.

With the best of intentions each individual allegedly was directly informed of the criminal intent by the felon (and failed to report the intent) and/or provided material support to the felon.

This part of the story begins not far from Cedar Swamp, Alabama, where this still young girl was both daughter and mother.

She helped care for younger siblings absent proper parents. She never knew her Pop, and her Mom worked all day and some nights to put food on the table.

All that was needed to get by

Though a young girl in an oppressive rural environ, she aspired to become an influencer, just like her bestie who performs on OnlyFans. (NSFW)

That did not come to pass and soon after she became interested in boys and football - as natural as chicken'n'biscuits in Alabama or anywhere / when.

Most locals fervently follow the Crimson Tide football dynasty - once lead by Hall of Famer coach Paul "Bear" Bryan. The crimson tide's "A" for Alabama is part of her story. Though, what unfolded here leans much closer towards another storied red "A".

A story few in Alabama are likely to have read.

In this case the crimson tide streaming through 'Bama is not all about all American football, though it has been whispered that at least one Gump made a play or two on her field.

Unfortunately, this crimson tide ebbed instead of flowed, much to the detriment of the young, convicted felon.

Ironically, The Scarlet Letter, authored by Nathaniel Hawthorne and published in 1850, is a fictional study set in Massachusetts Bay Colony during the 1640's with a focus on Puritanical life. More than a passing resemblance in fact and deed to Cedar Swamp, Alabama, and its protagonist.

Who'd a thunk? Played out nearly 400 years ago.

The life of today's judged convict is not entirely unlike that of Hester Prynne who also misjudged the tide, and ended up pregnant while unmarried. The Bay and Bayou were not dissimilar in this respect.

Subsequently, the religious Ms. Prynne struggled with correctness, sin, and guilt - but was in fact permitted to live out her natural life.

Ms. Prynne chose to go her own way, though not far from the village, nor conforming to the Puritan's way. While she was banished for her decision she was ultimately the better for it.

Not so, with respect to today's sinner.

Ms. Prynne's thinking evolved to where, through proper penance for in her case a singular sin, may not prevent people from hitting Heaven, and may enable them to dare to be dignified.

However, today's Harvard and Yale educated judge, Justice Judy, had no more latitude in this case than those who judged Ms. Prynne in the Puritanical Bay.

It is whispered that the Northerner here is not aligned with the Southern law as it stands, both her hands remain legally tied.

Rewarded by the State

On a more positive note, a Mr. John Row of nearby Pine Grove is $10,000 richer.

It was previously reported by local media The Weekly Bluff, that Mr. Row presented sufficient evidence to local authorities to be granted the statutory reward for the capture, arrest, and conviction of the reproductive felon.

And, so near the holidays, too.

A final thought: you must always remember

You see something say something

Who knows, you too could be $10,000 richer!
